Hua Tuo was a famous doctor in ancient China.

When Hua Tuo was seven years old, his father died. He helps his mother gather firewood, herd cattle, and raise silkworms every day.

One day, Hua Tuo and several children were picking mulberry leaves together. An old grandfather passed by and asked them, "Who can pick the leaves from the top of the tree?" Fine, it can't go up at all!

Hua Tuo thought about it, found a rope, tied a rock to one end of the rope, and threw the rock over the branch, and the branch was bent. He tugged at the rope again with both hands, and the branches were lower. In this way, he picked the leaves on the top of the tree.

The old grandfather smiled and said, "This child likes to use his brain, well, I will accept you as an apprentice!" It turned out that the old grandfather was a famous local doctor Cai.
